

Olympic Color monologue

(5–7 minutes)

Enter an older child from behind the blue screen.

Molly: Hi! I'm Molly, a missionary kid who lives in England with my parents who are Southern Baptist Missionaries. I carry the Olympic color blue because it is a color in both the British flag and United States flag.

Living in England has been really interesting. I've seen many historical places like the Tower of London, Buckingham Palace, and lots of castles.

It's good to be in a place where English is the spoken language, but I found out in a hurry that some words are different from the terms we use in the US. Sometimes I have to remind Dad that he should say trousers instead of pants since pants in England means underwear.

Another strange thing is that cars drive on the left side of the road. Dad sits on the right side of the front seat when he drives.

Being a member of a Brownie pack is one of my favorite things. Brownie groups are a part of Girl Guides, which is called Girl Scouts in the US. We meet on Friday nights, and I've enjoyed playing the games and earning badges.

One thing my parents are trying to do is make friends with the people here so that they can have an opportunity to tell them about Jesus. I think I'm helping with that since some of the parents of my friends have become my parents' friends too.

Please pray for my family to build relationships with British friends and for these friends to come to know Christ.
